March 29, 2011

In an effort to understand his young son with autism, Todd Drezner searches for and meets adults on the spectrum as he sensitively examines the tug between viewing autism as a different way of being and an expression of diversity within the human gene pool as contrasted to considering autism as a condition needing cure or elimination.

I discuss the role of music for people on the autism spectrum and is shown teaching piano to a child with autism. Further footage focuses on the parental role of my "early intervention," challenges in grade school, dating and meeting my wife who is also a musician.
